The recent storms have officially been classified as disasters, underscoring the scale of disruption to communities and essential services. Providing an update on recovery efforts, Western Cape Premier Alan Winde acknowledged residents' frustrations as authorities work to restore power, repair damaged infrastructure and resume critical services.

"We understand the frustration many residents are feeling. It has been an exceptionally difficult time and we, along with all role players, apologise for any inconvenience. We thank residents for their patience. Officials have been working tirelessly under extremely difficult conditions to restore power and other critical services as quickly and safely as possible," Winde said.

According to the provincial government, Eskom has restored electricity to 80% of affected customers.

However, restoration efforts have been hampered by difficult terrain, vandalism and cable theft.

The Western Cape Government strongly condemned acts of vandalism and theft, saying they continue to aggravate the situation.

Regional repairs continue

In the Cape Winelands District, repairs to the main power line between Boskloof and Romansburg are progressing, while teams are also attending to faults in Chavonnes, Hexrivier, Rawsonville and Witzenberg.

In the Cederberg area, repair teams are replacing and restringing damaged poles and conductors in Citrusdal. Work in Algeria is expected to begin once repairs in Citrusdal and Lutzville have been completed.

Several areas in the Garden Route District, including Blanco farms and Harkerville, also remain without electricity as restoration efforts continue.

Construction work in Lutzville in the Matzikama region is progressing, while recovery operations are ongoing in Elgin, Papiesvlei and Stanford in the Overberg region.

The province said about 400 roads were affected by the storms, with more than 60% already repaired and reopened.

Humanitarian relief efforts have also intensified across affected communities.

Non-governmental organisations funded by the Western Cape Department of Social Development are working with relief organisations and government entities to provide meals, blankets, mattresses, water, baby packs and clothing to affected residents.

On Friday, 22 May 2026 Winde visited the Mustadafin Foundation in Cape Town, where volunteers have been distributing warm meals and disaster-relief packs.

"The work this foundation and others do is inspiring. Thank you for your selflessness," the Premier said during the visit.

Winde also visited the National Sea Rescue Institute Volunteer Support Centre in Cape Town, commending rescue personnel involved in search and rescue operations during and after the storms.

“These brave women and men think little of giving their time and expertise, often risking their safety to help others. You are truly extraordinary,” the Premier said.

The Provincial Disaster Management Centre continues to co-ordinate the province’s disaster-response and recovery operations.
